

Corporate disclosures: what are investors looking for beyond financial measures?

29th August 2017, 08.00 – 10.30 hrs. at Lotus 5-7, Centara Grand at Central World

Overview

Sustainability has become an increasingly important dimension when it comes to protecting and enhancing an enterprise's value. Sustainability in this context entails the continual improvement in both business strategy development and operational execution through environmental and socially sensitive business performance. It deals with the relationship of the company with not only investors but also consumers, business partners, employees and the community at large.

Growing stakeholder and regulatory demands related to governance and transparency, product responsibility, climate change and natural resource protection are leading investors to recognize that sustainability-based investment strategies may enhance business advantage both across the investment life cycle and portfolio valuation.

For investors, the issues and opportunities presented by sustainability are not only becoming a factor in buy/sell transacting; they have become integral to managing the day-to-day operations of the investment portfolio companies. Sustainability is increasingly being woven into investment decisions, ongoing business management and legal, regulatory and financial risk frameworks. The talk focuses on investors' expectations and how the organizations close the expectation gap by developing sustainability strategies, executing effectively and communicating transparently.
